

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

Before we properly delve into the main themes of this work, there the need for an adequate introduction, that is because of the great amount of conceptual confusion that has been accumulated in during the entire time of existence of human life, of biased reflections, of partial experiences and other obstacles which prevent most of the individuals interested in “knowledge” from discovering new expressions of knowledge by themselves.

The greatest difficulty comes from the general lack of knowledge which exists concerning the physiological nature of the human mind, given that humanity has been implanted in this planet without a decent manual of instructions which would allow each individual to live according to his specific mental nature, therefore taking full advantage of his potential in life, hence here would live longer and in better conditions and in harmony with everything and everyone around him.

H. C. Santos, a researcher on the human individuality [1] says:

“... little do we know about the nature of the mental mechanisms and of the impressions they generate; everything vaguely conceptual and conducted by the prejudices of those who search for answers...”

We would normally ignore how our opinions and beliefs are formed; we don't imagine that they are a result of comparisons performed at a mental level, use and all the previously established references in our minds; the more references in our memories, the greater is the sensation and the reality which we observe is in fact real.

To if there are no references referring to that which we observe, we don't believe in it, we find them to be false, or we simply laugh at them. We depend on only one side, on our own mental nature, and also the habits we might have acquired...

Therefore, the truth which we can perceive depends on one side on the nature of our minds and, on another, on the quality of our internal references.

We normally forget that our internal references have almost always been imposed onto us without any kind of explanation, be it from our parents, from school and not even by society, and then they are not assuredly truthful in that which concerns the physical reality as we observe it. That means we are usually incapable of thinking use in our own minds.

Although many individuals have plain conscience that changes are necessary, usually they take a passive stance, hoping that others might perform those changes. In general they experience difficulties in reevaluating their concepts, as if they had sworn an eternal oath to their education system... Resistance to changes, however, is not a privilege of anyone”

So, facing the new concepts presented in the following pages of this work, it would be good for anyone looking for new fundamental knowledge, to open their mind's doors and windows... Abandoning any narrow minded formation a [2] so you can understand, enjoy, share with others and even contribute in some way because:

“The truth is not a privilege of anyone”

Move forward!

Be a master of the future generations!

It is worth it!

NOTES:

[1] H. C. Santos - Brazilian researcher, he developed studies on the human mind and its interactions between individuals through “cerebral specters “; `Phase Spectrometry` (as he called it)-we have not heard of him in years...

[2] the new view of everything that is to be unraveled will only be perceived and comprehended by people with a real (pure) desire, without prejudices rooted in their minds aside from their literacy.
